

Any Way You Cut it: Meat Processing and Small-town America

By Donald D. Stull, etc., Michael J. Broadway, David Griffith

University Press of Kansas. Paperback. Book Condition: new. BRAND NEW, Any Way You Cut it: Meat Processing and Small-town America, Donald D. Stull, etc., Michael J. Broadway, David Griffith, In pursuit of jobs and economic development, many rural communities have attracted large meat, poultry, and fish processing plants owned by transnational corporations. But what they don't bargain for is the increase in crime, homelessness, school overcrowding, housing shortages, social disorder, cyclical migration, and poverty that inevitably follows. To shed light on the forces that drive the meat industry and the communities where it locates, Donald Stull, Michael Broadway, and David Griffith have brought together the varying perspectives of anthropologists, geographers, sociologists, journalists, and industry specialists. Despite increased automation, these experts show that meat, poultry, and fish processing remain labor intensive create problems for employees, host communities, and government regulatory agencies. Since 1906 when Sinclair Lewis exposed the horrors of Chicago meat-packing in "The Jungle," consumers have been wary of the process that—even under the best conditions—is an ugly business. Conversely, meat packers are often defensive and distrustful of outside advice and government intervention, even as they look for ways to cut costs and enhance low profit margins. In an effort...
