Excerpt: . . . that people with amputations have. The Center in Seattle is focusing a little bit more on prevention of limb loss and they are coordinating their research activities with a podiatry service, clinical podiatry service which leads a program called PACT, which is Prevention of Amputation Care Team, which is a national program within the VA. That focuses on reducing the risk of amputation primarily for older veterans who are at risk due to diabetes and peripheral vascular disease. The center in Seattle is a research center that coordinates with clinical centers, but I think they are talking about a different type of center. I think that they were talking about a clinical center for prosthetics care maybe to link with the center in Seattle. But I do not want to speak-The Chairman. Well, wait a minute. Let me ask Mr. Blake because I am confused. What are you asking for, Mr. Blake Mr. Blake. I would say it would be a broad-based center that has both clinical aspects to it as well as research aspects. And we also make recommendations so that these centers put a great deal of emphasis on research in terms of performance standards and improving the equipment that is being placed out there. Although we recognize that many of the servicemembers who are coming back through places like Walter Reed in particular but Bethesda or Brooke are receiving high-quality prosthetics, that is being done through a program supported with DoD....
