Excerpt: .towards the topmost heights of the mountain, and approached the summit itself, scarcely a stonecrop or a moss could hold its place among the wind-swept crannies of the barren heights. The air blew keen and fresh even in the heat of a Syrian September, and Julian seemed to grow into a fresh man as he thought of the stifling heat of Antioch which he had left behind. It was about four in the afternoon when the little body of cavalry rode round the last shoulder, and halted on the little plateau of limestone on which stood the temple of Jupiter Casius. It was a glorious scene that met the eyes of those horsemen, as they pulled up then horses and sat drinking in the cool fresh air as it rushed past them. Below them, almost at their feet it seemed--though in truth a mile...
