Stems and Twigs, ii, 172. Root Thoughts. The diverse relations which man sustains must come into our estimate of any religious system devised for his improvement. He is a subject of God s grace; an object of Christ s atoning love, and a sharer with his fellow-man in these things. To God he owes allegiance, to Christ love, to man sympathy and helpfulness. As the subject of God he is to be judged. Under the divine plan he is to be judged by Christ himself; the basis of final judgment on the side of God is his attitude toward God; on the side of man his attitude toward his fellow-man as tho proof of his true relations and feelings toward God. It is easy to have reverence, and admiration, and a sentimental love toward the invisible God, and toward the invisible Christ, who has made him known. One may sing songs, and offer prayers, and read his Bible, and be interested in the Church, and yet not love God and his Son with a love that molds him into their image. Therefore, to cultivate love for God the invisible, (he himself being the perfection of unselfish love, ) we are required to love man with...
