Such a feeling may indeed become the mainspring of very vigorous action, but only when each finds his own feeling in all associating with him and self-interest does not impel him in another direction. Neither the one or the other happens among German-Americans. As they do not live in segregated masses but scattered among the nonGermanic each must make his German ethnic feelin potent against the opposition of his neighbors instead of being inspired t rough their like disposition. It is not to be wondered at that through such efforts no enduring result has been secured.--- Ernest Bruncken. VWhat really constitutes a nation in the highest sense of the word is not its political or social organizations which furnish the mere body, but the ani-mating soul of a higher culture, the...
