Excerpt: . . . for reading, of course, he must do something, and billiards is a very fascinating amusement, said May apologetically. Still, I am beginning to understand why foreigners think that English people care for nothing but playing games. Perhaps in winter he will have more time for work. Your brother hunts six days a week in winter, which he would tell you was very hard work indeed, said Mr. Gethell, shaking his head. But if he would set aside even a single hour daily in which to occupy himself seriously now, I should be thankful. It would soon become a habit, and extend itself to a longer period. He is so young. I wish, my dear young lady, that you would use your influence. I have known my brother so short a time, and he is older than I am. I dont like to interfere, said...
