Not illustrated. 1856 Excerpt: . . . the rollers, and the threads must be wound upon the spindles. This is the order of movements which belong to the mule. It has been shown how the rotation of the spindles is produced. For winding-on the yarn the carriage has a peculiar apparatus, which we shall aow describe. In front of it, through the whole extent to the right hand as well as the left, a slender iron rod, d, runs horizontally along, in a line somewhat higher than the middle of the coping portion of the spindles, and is supported by several props, such aj e. Upon each end of the two rods, ds, there is an arm, g5; and betwixt these arms an iron wire, called the coping wire, s, is stretched, parallel with the rod fc. For the support of this wire, there arc several slender bent arms As extended from the...
